When thirtysomething Parisian Matthieu (Pierre Deladonchamps, STRANGER BY THE LAKE) learns that the father he didn't know he had has died, he decides to travel to the funeral in Quebec and meet his two siblings. But once in Montreal, Matthieu realizes that his new family does not share his desire to connect. He is alone, in hostile territory.

With this story of a man coming to terms with the foreign family he never knew he had, contemporary French cinema's great humanist Philippe Lioret (WELCOME)'s film is filled with secrets, with themes of masculinity, family and paternity coiling in the layers underneath.
