

“The practice of ‘kunyaza,’ female ejaculation, has become a kind of sexual norm in Rwanda in stark contrast to a global sexuality aimed at the satisfaction of men.”

—Matthieu Rostac, Slate

“A respectful ode to female pleasure, with a sense of humor and not a trace of embarrassment.”

—Amsterdam International Documentary Film Festival (IDFA)

“The most beautiful thing in the world is discussed surprisingly frankly and confidently—along with gender relations.” —DOK Leipzig

Vestine Dusabe is a radio host and sex educator with a mission: promoting sexual pleasure and preserving Rwanda’s culture of female ejaculation.

SACRED WATER follows Dusabe as she takes calls on her late-night radio show (including one in which a woman has a very vocal orgasm), educates school-girls about ejaculation and female pleasure as central to Rwandan culture, and addresses a crowd on International Women’s Day to discuss orgasms.

SACRED WATER provokes with its frank intimacy while being an immersive journey into a modern Rwanda that is rediscovering its own heritage of revering the sacredness of female pleasure.
