What You Gonna Do When the World's on Fire? is the story of a black community in the American South during summer 2017, when a string of brutal killings of young African American men sent shockwaves throughout the country. A meditation on the state of race in America, this film is an intimate portrait of those who struggle for justice, dignity, and survival in a country that is not on their side.

"Rich on both human and historical scales."

—New York Times

"Urgent and absolutely essential... One of the very best films of 2019!"
